My parents are openly supportive but secretly unsupportive.

My mother loves bragging about me to her friends and co-workers (I'm 20 and running a sweet little part-time business that pays for my university degree) but when the time comes for me to ask her questions about business, or go to the next step... she always stops me and tells me that I'm fine where I am, why grow when I'm good here, etc. It's definitely disheartening! I know she's proud of me, but her fear keeps me back a lot.

For me, I've started being more firm about my business and stopped telling my mother, lol. Although she's an accountant with a huge company and has a business degree, I've made steps towards finding other mentors who can push me to bigger goals. I still share with her, love on her, and we talk about lots of things... just not what my near-future goals are. If I get to my goal, I tell her and she's happy. If I don't get there, she never has to know.
